WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY

Office of the Dean College of Business Washington State University Pullman, WA 99164-4730

March 10, 2010

Dear David:

The Dean's Office in the WSU College of Business has received a complaint that you repeatedly interrupted a recent finance exam by leaving the class on numerous occasions after you were asked by the instructor to remain in the room for the remainder of the exam. The class disturbance interfered with students taking the exam and may have impacted their performance in the class. This situation is unacceptable and is not isolated. During Fall 2009 and Spring 2010 (your first two terms in the MBA program), you have exhibited a variety of similar disruptive behaviors that have given students, faculty and administrators cause for concern. In particular, several students have indicated their concern with your interpersonal interactions with them and your disruptive classroom behavior. From this point forward, these behaviors must stop.

This is a final warning. If I become aware of additional disruptive behavior or other violations of the Student Code of Conduct, I will immediately forward your case to the Dean of Students as a student conduct violation, which could lead to your suspension or expulsion from Washington State University, or other disciplinary sanctions. If you are experiencing difficulties with test taking that could be eligible for reasonable accommodation, I encourage you to contact the Disability Resource Center to discuss resources that may be available to you.

Sincerely,

David E. Sprott
Associate Dean for Graduate, International and Professional Programs
Boeing / Scott and Linda Carson Chair
College of Business, Washington State University